The analysis revealed no apparent benefit of ICI compared with chemotherapy alone.^[@R1]^ The authors concluded that routine use of ICI after resection in NSCLC does not appear to improve overall survival (OS) or recurrence-free survival (RFS) compared with chemotherapy alone. However, there is a low incidence of postoperative recurrence in the surgical context. Thus, we questioned the validity of this study. First, omitting the adjuvant-therapy group from the analysis does not reflect clinical care because most patients with NSCLC undergoing surgical resection are treated adjuvantly. Second, for adjuvant-therapy, some patients will receive ICI and others will not receive ICI, and thus, OS and RFS cannot be compared. Third, the adjuvant-therapy in the individual studies was not well controlled. Additionally, the combination of chemotherapy and ICI in the
